

James Tweed kneeling beside his “Chinese hats”. These are plastic saucers stocked on a concrete port, they provide a firm surface on which “spat” (young oysters) can grow.

“Chinese hats” for collecting young oysters.

James Tweed's oyster logs. Oysters grow to maturity in these logs.

Oysters almost ready for market.

Oysters growing in tents at Rutgers' oyster station.

Oyster spot at Rutgers' oyster station.