

There are a few other things I am working on that are related to sorghum. We have found that sorghum stalks after juice extraction makes good silage for cattle feed. We have tried using a filter press to clean the finished syrup, but found we need a special filter paper and are working with a company in Missouri to come up with the right paper to use. I have saved a good supply of seeds from the different varieties we have grown in our test plots. While attending the NSSPPA meeting, I met a fellow from North Carolina that is growing seventy different varieties of sorghum and plan to trade seeds with him this spring. I am also working with the Vermont Department of Agriculture to get the Seal of Quality established for sorghum syrup.
