Please share other comments on the workshop or suggestions for future topics.

Woody provided a solid for-profit perspective. I think it was good for our group of government and university folks to have their paradigms challenged regarding how WI does grazing education.

It was great to have Dick Ryan attend the entire event as well.

I was impressed with what Woody had to share and hope we will have more speakers of a similar caliber! Thanks!

Very good information about private, fee-based discussion groups. And a very timely topic as many currently grant funded grazing specialists are or will be looking for fee-for-service ideas to replace or supplement grant dollars. Woody's ideas would definitely have to be modified to fith Wisconsin's current and past history of grazing education--may still struggle with willingness of farmers to pay for grass-based education. Also came away from the workshop knowing that if farmers are willing to pay a discussion group facilitator, facilitator must be highly knowledgable about a variety of things related to grass-farming (I don't think farmers would pay for someone to simply 'facilitate'--they would want expertise as well).

Seems the biggest benefit of charing a fee is a commitment from the participants/members. Can also serve as a grant match.

I think the discussion groups are a valuable tool, but in my current government position it would be difficult to do. I do think this session taught me a lot about how to be a more effective manager of pasture walks and meetings in general.

Since WI has effective agencies to support gree grazing networks, the fee-based model may not be the singular answer in WI. I think the attendees could follow up with a discussion of effective trategies to advance grazing groups in WI identifying group leaders and contributors for in depth discussions.

I enjoyed the diverse backgrounds of the participants and consequently the array of questions and discussion topics. I like the model of facilitated discussion groups. It was a well-organized, substantive workshop.

Organic issues vs. non-organic research plots & how that information is shared with others in the grazing community.
