Community group bonds over growing white corn

White corn hangs in a rented barn a group of community members rented to harvest their crop of white corn. The group harvested 176 braids which they will share between the group.

Kali photo/Nate Wisneski

“We’re just so thankful that this is our family and we’re able to get this work done. It’s truly a blessing.”

Some group projects can drive wedges between people but the shared workload created a positive environment.

“We’re going to plant it together, were going to grow it together, were going to harvest it together, and were going to eat it together,” said Manthe.