

Ontario County Soil Health Work Shop 2020

This is a room full of farmers (grain, dairy, crop, etc.), who all took time out of their day to learn more ways to improve soil health on their farms.

I don't know about you, but that seems like a pretty solid effort to be CONNECTED TO NATURE. In fact, growing food for people (regardless of what diet you chose to follow) requires us to understand our soils to utilize them fully and make sure they will be productive for years to come.

This means we need to understand: weather impacts on soil, soils types, biodiversity of our soils, crop rotation, land gradients across all our acres, and so much more.

We were happy Matt from our crop team could take the time to attend this conference. We are responsible for over 4,000 acres of land. Those acres need to be well managed in order to provide food for our cows.
